

In Corfu, Greece, people observe Holy Saturday (the day before Easter) with an old tradition called “botides.” Thousands of people gather in the center of town to watch as large clay pots filled with water are thrown from balconies and smash into pieces onto the streets below.

In Poland, during the observance of Śmigus-dyngus on the day after Easter, children drench other people with buckets of water, squirt guns, or water balloons.

With your family, read Isaiah 41:17-18, John 4:14, and John 7:37-38. How do these Lenten and Easter traditions in Greece and Poland celebrate the gift of living water that Christ offers us?
